

Are You a Physician Dedicated to Wound Care?

By James McGuire, DPM, PT, LPed, FAPWHc, Clinical Professor, Temple University School of Podiatric Medicine

Wound healing requires a special type of physician dedicated to knowing and applying the latest advances in medical science to the art of wound closure and skin protection. We, physicians certified by the Council for Medical Education and Testing (CMET), have taken the time to become certified as wound healing specialists who wholeheartedly embrace the management of patients who come to us with non-healing wounds. CMET-certified physicians are hands-on wound healers who work together to coordinate the many specialists needed to optimize wound outcomes and reduce patient suffering and morbidity. Are you one of the doctors called to join this special group?

CMET is a unique physician-specific certification, credentialing allopathic, osteopathic, and podiatric physicians with parity. It provides the podiatric physician with a unique opportunity to be certified by the same organization that certifies all other physicians with a wound care specialty. It is the largest certification of its kind and is the first physician-specific certification. The organization was started by physicians for physicians. If you have a heart for wound care I invite you to further investigate CMET certification at COUNCILmet.org. Here you will find multiple sites where you are able to take the exam and suggestions for study. Within the next 4 to 6 weeks you will be able to sit for certification in your home, or in your office without the necessity of travel and additional expenses. The CMET has made the process easy to obtain what in my opinion is the certification that any physician should select when seeking credentialing in wound care.

Click here for more information.

PS: Make sure you attend the next Academy of Physicians in Wound Healing (APWH) annual conference, in Philadelphia October 10-12, 2018 at the Philadelphia Airport Embassy Suites Hotel.

CMET is a unique physician-specific certification,
credentialing allopathic,
osteopathic, and podiatric
physicians with parity.