

A Mission for Superior Wound Care: How AMERX Health Care's Dedication to Quality Delivers for Clinicians and Patients

By Joshua Trujillo

In the demanding field of podiatry, clinicians require partners whose products are not only effective but are also built on a foundation of quality and trust. For patients with diabetic foot complications, the stakes are incredibly high, and the need for reliable solutions is constant. It was in response to this clinical need that AMERX Health Care Corporation was established. Founded in 1993 by John C. Anderson, the company was built on a clear mission: "providing superior wound and skin care products that deliver positive outcomes, increase patient compliance, and reduce treatment costs."

the healing process in multiple ways. Its formulation features Oakin® (an oak extract), which promotes a moist wound environment essential for optimal healing and assists in autolytic debridement. Critically, Oakin® also provides broad-spectrum antibacterial and antifungal properties, helping to protect delicate, compromised skin from infection while managing the wound's bioburden. This multifaceted dressing simplifies treatment protocols and is available in multiple sizes, ensuring a versatile solution for varying wound types.

For more challenging wounds that are stalled due to an imbalance of proteins, the HELIX3® Collagen product line is also indicated for diabetic ulcers. These products provide a collagen matrix that supports cellular migration and helps accelerate the growth of new tissue. A recent study showed:

"Faster wound closure rates and an improvement in the epithelialization process in the group treated with native collagen (Helix3) compared to control."

AMERX's commitment to clinicians extends beyond its product portfolio to encompass the operational realities of running a modern practice.

A Foundational Focus on Prevention

The ethos of AMERX begins where all effective diabetic foot care should: prevention. While advanced wound dressings are critical, the company's philosophy emphasizes the power of maintaining a robust skin barrier to prevent ulceration in the first place. This principle is embodied in their AMERIGEL® Care Lotion (Night) and Barrier Lotion (Daytime). The primary function of these lotions is to preserve the skin's natural barrier. In addition, the Oakin® found in both products provides broad-spectrum antibacterial and antifungal properties, which are essential for reducing the occurrence of infections in delicate or compromised skin. For a high-risk diabetic foot, this comprehensive approach is a vital function, as minor fissures can quickly become serious wounds. By providing these effective daily lotions, AMERX gives clinicians the tools to help patients take a proactive role in their own care, reinforcing the clinical goal of ulcer prevention.

A Partner in Modern Clinical Practice

AMERX's commitment to clinicians extends beyond its product portfolio to encompass the operational realities of running a modern practice. The company demonstrates this partnership by providing vital education on administrative updates, such as the new ICD-10-CM code set effective October 1, 2025. Its sponsored CME webinars serve as another key educational resource, offering expert insights on topics ranging from practice management and coding and billing to emerging treatment options. This dual focus on both clinical excellence and practice viability underscores AMERX's role as a comprehensive partner for today's health care provider.

A Legacy of Dedication to a Founding Vision

The legacy of AMERX Health Care is rooted in its founder's vision of a true clinical partnership. This is demonstrated not only through its comprehensive system for managing diabetic foot conditions but also through the continuous insights and benefits it provides to clinicians. By offering crucial support for both patient care and practice management, AMERX empowers its partners to navigate the complexities of modern health care, from prevention to advanced wound resolution.
